The Twenty-inch Cun--Seventy-two Tuns of Metal at one "Heat."

From The Findency Dispatch of the 26th.

We have already noticed the fact that preparations were progressing at the Fort Pitt Works, in this car, for the manufacture of 20 itself gons, the lather patterns, &c., being in an advanced condition. As the experiment of manufacturing a gon of such a cellipre, however, is one of great risk it was determined to settle at least one point practically before attempting to mould the great gun, by medium, at a single best nearly the same quantity of metal as would be required for the 20-inch. For this purpose two guns were moulded of the 15-inch hollow over, making the rough weight of each of the guns nearly as great as that of the columbiad 15-inch hollow over, making the gongh weight of each of the guns nearly as great as that of the columbiad 15-inch hollow over, making the gongh weight of each of the guns nearly as great as that of the columbiad 15-inch hollow over, making the gongh weight of each of the guns nearly as great as that of the columbiad 15-inch hollow over, making the gongh weight of each of the guns nearly as great as that of the columbiad 15-inch hollow over, making the gongh weight of each of the guns nearly as great as that of the columbiad 15-inch hollow over, making the great gun and two for the ordingry work of the along. The late raid of the Rebels under Shelby and Coffee still furnishes an occasional paragraph for the local press. The Rebels have been chased to the Arkansas line in one direction, and into concealment is another. Their last cannon was captured at Humans cover in the old guerrilla territory, along the Kanasa line south of the Osage. Coffee, who knows this ground well, is with him. Col. Hunter, said to hold a regular commission in the Confederate service, heads a band of the flying Rebels, about 300 strong, who have
